Earnings Too Low and Business Wouldn't Be Stimulated, He Declares

BETTERMENTS ARE NEEDED

By the Associated Press Washington, Jan. 31.-Walker D. Hines, former Director General of the Railroad Administration, called today as a representative of the public by the Interstate Commerce Commission in its investigation of transportation rate levels, testified that in his opinion railroad earnings are too low to admit of general rate reductions and business would not be stimulated by such a step if taken.

Mr. Hines estimated that "in the public interest it is probably necessary for the railroads to spend on betterments and facilities at least a billion lollars a year for some time to come.

"Looking over the statistics of railroad earnings during 1921," Mr. Hines said, "we can take it for granted that general rate reductions are not called for on the ground that earnings are too high. We must all admit railroad rates are high now, but in my opinion current business depression is not due to that fact, but to conditions that are undamental and worldwide. Chiefly is the effort of people to get to a normandjustment after the strain of the grea

"Second, we must conclude that it would reduce the purchasing power of the railroads themselves, which is an important factor in the fabric of commercial organization. I doubt that a reduction would stimulate business. Depression is due to the absence of demand for commodities, which demand cannot be created by slight price reluctions which rate reductions would

"It would be doubtful whether the effect of the reduction would ever reach those sections of the community which need support because the benefit would be monopolized by those classes which are most highly organized.

He said he lid not have information on which to base an opinion as to whether any given reduction should be made.

R. C. Fullbright, representing South-western shippers, asked Mr. Hines if all other industries had not had to face losses during 1920 and 1921. "No doubt that is true," the witness plied, "But looking at it from a the law. He finally overcame his fa-

Here is, for the time being, the world's champion typewriter and a really useful athlete.

He beat all comers, writing steadily for one hour, 136 WORDS A MINUTE, which means twelve strokes a second.

Look at the second hand as it moves on your watch, or count 1,and realize that what it means for the human brain to order and carry out twelve different motions of the fingers in one second. There is intensified mental athletics that makes the hundred-yard dash, the pole vault or the Marathon seem slow, to say nothing of being useless.

As this young man wrote in the contest, he read and copied a story which he had not seen before, called "In God's Country." And do you realize the various operations included in that marvelous performance of twelve strokes per second.

The eye read the word. The nerves of the eye told the brain what word was to be written. The brain told the fingers what the letters were, where they were located on the machine, and the flying fingers, taking the knowledge that first came to the eye or the afferent nerves, and the order they came down the neck, the arms to the ringer tips through the effervent nerves, made the twelve strokes successfully.

He kept his mind entirely on that for one hour. That wonderful dynamo, that stored energy, the eye seeing, the brain imme diately transforming the printed word in the letters, the nerveand the muscles in the fingers carrying out the brain's orders It is difficult to conceive anything more remarkable. Young Mr Hossfeld may well include in his daily prayer: "I will praise the Lord, for I am fearfully and wonderfully made." It takes intelligence to do good typewriting; it takes extraordinary adaptability, co-ordination of nerves and muscles, steadiness and will power to do what this young man did. He deserves praise, as does every man who does A USEFUL
